TOKYO - Revised tape transcripts released by the government Tuesday indicate that the pilot of the South Korean airliner shot employment that made down by a Soviet fighter was able-to communicate clearly with Japanese air controllers 38 seconds after being hit by two missiles.

A Transport Ministry official said that "the tone of the pilot's voice was normal" and was not different from that used during routine transmissions for more than an hour before the attack. ... The action prompted South Korea to say that it would press for further sanctions against Previous Japanese government transcripts suggested that immediately after the passenger plane was hit on the morning of Sept. 1, only one garbled radio signal was picked up by civil aviation authorities at Narita International Airport near Tokyo. But according to the new version, moments earlier, yet 38 seconds after the airliner had been struck, the Narita tower heard a distinct identification call — Tokyo, Koreanair 007."

The material points to more contact then previously known be-

On Sunday, the military's recordings were amended to indicate that Soviet fighters had fired "canoon bursis" at 3:20, or six minutes before the air-to-air missile attack was launched. This raised a possibility that the Soviet planes had fired warning shots, as Moscow has claimed.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman, Wasuke Miyake, said Tuesday the government still was "oot sure if these were warning shots at all." In any event, he said, the Korean plane was not aware of unusual activity because otherwise the pilot, in talking with Narits, "must say something or make reference to

There was speculation that if, in fact. there had been warning shots, the Korean pilot might have been distracted by what he was doing or could not have seen anything during his climb.

Reagan Clears Marines To Order Air Strikes

By Lou Cannon and George C. Wilson

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan on Tuesday authorized the U.S. Marines in Beirut to call in air strikes against forces helling their positions, the White

White House officials said the move would serve notice in Syria that the United States was ready to escalate its firepower in Lebanon.

A White House spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said that under the mandate of the multinational force the 1,200 marines in Beirut and support elements offshore could take "appropriate measures in defense" from Beirut if there was a threat to the safety of the force or of other U.S. military personnel or diplomats. The marines have always been authorized to defend themselves," Mr. Speakes said. "They have done so and will continue to do so." The marines or the supporting units offshore may take appropriate counteraction against the attack units," he said.

The decision was made after a weekend meeting that included the national security adviser, William P. Clark; the secretary of state, George P. Shultz; the secretary of defense, Caspar W. Weinberger, and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General John W. Vessey Jr. of the army.

The strongest argument for mili-tary action, officials said, came in communications from Robert C. McFarlane, the Middle East special envoy.

Officials said Mr. McFarlane argued that the marines must be given more protection by having the authority to call in AV-8 Harrier fighter-bombers and navy A-6 bombers from the carrier Eisenhower off Beirut, Mr. McFarlane also argued that the U.S. government must demonstrate to Arab nations that it was a reliable ally. Mr. Reagan's agreement, an official said, allows the marines to enlist help from offshore without always going up the chain of command to Washington. The authorization may increase that the dispatch of the battleship "would send the wrong signal to our troops, to our allies and to the Syrians," an official said. Another official said this also would be likely to touch off a domestic political debate that would complicate U.S. diplomatic efforts in the region.

U.S. officials say invocation of the 90-day provision would be "a wrong signal" that would encour-age the Syrians to hang back from diplomatic efforts to end the fighting in Lebanon.

Some officials said the Syrians would be likely to increase their support of President Amin Gemayel's opponents in the hope of drawing U.S. Marines into combat and increasing U.S. domestic pressure for withdrawal. These officials said that a signal of withdrawal also might encourge the French, who also have troops in Lebanon who have taken casualties, to reconsider their role.

An administration official said that a resolution expressing support for administration objectives but imposing an 18-month limit would be "beneficial" from the point of view of persuading the Syrians that Mr. Reagan's deploy-ment of marines has U.S. domestic backing. Meanwhile, the State Depart-

IRA Said to Start Bombing Campaign

BELFAST (AP) — A bomb exploded Tuesday under a car near Warrenpoint on the border with Ireland after security chiefs were reported to have alerted police and troops that the Irish Republican Army was to start a major bombing campaign in Northern Ireland.

A police spokesman reported no casualties in the blast. Police say they believe the car belongs to a member of the security forces. Police said earlier that an incendiary device exploded outside a shop in the mainly Roman Catholic town of Strabane on the border, but no one was hurt. There was no immediate claim of responsibility for Tuesday's explosions, but police blamed the IRA.

Dutch Oueen Receives Jesse Jackson THE HAGUE (UPI) - The Rev. Jesse Jackson, a possible candidate for the U.S. presidency, met Tuesday with Queen Beatrix.

Later, at a hinch in Parliament with members of the Foreign Affairs Commission, Mr. Jackson said he "felt good" after the royal meeting. He was the first black American to be received by Queen Beatrix, a spokesman for the queen said.

The queen was "hospitable, generous and sensitive," Mr. Jackson said. He came to the Netherlands on the second leg of a European tour, which he described as an attempt to explore "alternatives to nuclear war."

McGovern Launches Nomination Bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Senator George S. McGovern launched another bid for the Democratic presidential nomination Tuesday. He said he supported arms control talks with the Russians, an end to U.S. military involvement in Central America and a program of government-backed education and other aid.

"I do not advocate unilateral disarmament," the 61-year-old South Dakotan said. "But I have no doubt that as president I could work out a realistic agreement with the Russian leaders that would stop the arms race and safely reduce arms spending." Mr. McGovern won the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination on a platform of ending the Vietnam War but then lost the general election overwhelmingly to President Richard M. Nixon. He was defeated in 1980 in his bid for a fourth Senate term.

Albania Notes Danger of Arms Race VIENNA (AP) - Albania warned Tuesday that installation of new medium-range missiles in Eastern and Western Europe was "fraught with The warning was contained in an editorial published by the Commu-

The newspaper said recent visits of Soviet military leaders to Eastern bloc countries were designed to "analyze measures the current Soviet leadership envisages to reinforce and modernize even more the Warsaw Pact in the bitter rivalry for hegemony" between the two

It added that this rivalry was taking place "above all as far as installation of new nuclear medium-range missiles on the territories of several East and West European countries is concerned, which is fraught with dangers." These plans, it said, were "an expression of the same aggressive and expansionist aims of American imperialism and Soviet social imperialism.

Iranians, Police Said to Clash in Mecca

LONDON (Reuters) - Iranian and other pilgrims clashed Tuesday with Saudi Arabian police after a rally outside the Iranian pilgrims' headquarters in Mecca, Tehran radin reported.

The radio, monitored in London by the British Broadcasting Corp., said Saudi special guards attacked the pilgrims as they moved toward the Grand Mosque, the holiest Moslem shrine. It said 25 Iranians were injured and others arrested. Tehran radio said last week that 14 Iranians had been arrested after demonstrations in which Iranian and other pilgrims had shouted slogans against the United States, Israel and the Soviet Union. An official source at the Saudi Ministry of Information later denied that arrests had been

Drought in America

... In the United States the effects of the long summer's drought are starting to show up. The producer price index for last month appeared because of rises in food prices. These increases will move through the chain to the grocery stores and consumers during the fall and winter, lifting the inflation rate a little higher than the recent and relatively benign 4 percent.

This contribution to inflation is important, but perhaps there is another point here, to take a slightly longer view, that also deserves attention. It is not entirely Pollyannish to observe that although American agriculture is now going through the worst drought in nearly half a century, the consequences so far are visible only to the statisticians and the professional traders. Everybody worries about how many percentage points the drought may contribute to inflation rates, but nobody worries about

America's basic food supply.

Bidding has tightened in the commodity exchanges. Prices of corn and soybeans are up 70 percent over this time last year; if the speculators who trade in futures are correct, they will rise a little more before another harvest comes in. Those crops are used largely to feed animals, so the price of meat will rise in the coming year. But wheat, which is mostly a winter crop, has not been so sharply affected. There is no reason to think the drought will have any impact on nutrition. To the contrary, despite the damage that the drought has in-flicted, there will continue to be a heavy flow of American agricultural exports abroad.

Where there is hunger in the United States, it reflects a failure of social responsibility, not a failure of agricultural production. Where Americans are malnourished, it is not because there is not a grocery store nearby. There are many parts of the world where the severity of drought is measured in the death rates. In the United States, the consequences do not extend much beyond price statistics.

Part of the explanation is an extraordinarily nevolent climate. Another part is the wealth that has built gigantic irrigation systems. Another is modern transportation, and particularly railroads. People with access to rail service may suffer dry summers, but they are unlikely to suffer famine. Without rails - in Europe as recently as the last century, and in much of the Third World today — villages have starved to death no more than 100 miles from markets operating almost normally.

Even in a drought as severe as this summer's, the incidence is spotty across the continent. Railroads and highways have become the equalizers. Everybody pays a little more, but no one need go hungry. In a very dry season,

The trouble with much "bilingual" education in America is that it isn't bilingual. Too often it is a program to teach children math, social studies and science in their native lauguage without any genuine effort to help them nction in English as soon as possible.

That moving children into English instruc-tion is desirable should be beyond debate. Whatever the transitional value of teaching them in a native language, English is the essential skill for anyone expecting opportunity in the United States. "Bilingual" programs are worthy of federal subsidy only so long as achievement in English is their true aim.

- That is the principle that would be re-affirmed by a bill the Reagan administration has submitted to Congress. The bill would let school systems decide how best to achieve the goal. But it would stop requiring that young-sters be taught in their native tongue.

Such native-language training may or may not be helpful to pupils also busily learning English. The available research is inconclusive. But the proposed law would stop denying federal aid to districts that choose to immerse them in mostly English studies.

Flexibility in approach was the clear intent of Congress 15 years ago when it passed the Bilingual Education Act to support any "new and imaginative" program for non-English speaking students. Only gradually was the statute bent to require teaching in native languages. The Health, Education and Welfare Department's Office of Civil Rights insisted in 1970 on "special assistance" for non-English speakers. The Supreme Court upheld its guidelines and directed schools to create special programs in foreign languages. In 1975 the civil rights office directed that districts had to develop "bilingual" programs; an allEnglish program no longer qualified for aid.

The bilingual programs have probably been useful in many situations, helping immigrant children adapt to a new culture at their own pace. They ended the often cruel practice, particularly in the Southwest, of letting Mexican-American students move uncomprehend-ingly through school, falling far behind be-cause they were learning neither English nor the subject matter in Spanish.

But all too often bilingual programs pay only lip service to the goal of making students proficient in English. Some teachers in the programs are themselves inadequate in En-glish. Students are often kept in non-English classes longer than necessary. The foreign-language teachers and bilingual managers have developed a vested interest in preserving their enrollments. They often exaggerate the harm of rushing youngsters along in English.

A study for the Twentieth Century Fund this year went so far as to urge the federal government to stop supporting bilingual edu-cation. It argued for "immersion" in English language study and special help in other sub-jects when needed. Most educators seem to consider that to be the soundest approach to educating children for life in America.

The virtue of the administration's bill is that it does oot even try to resolve this educational argument. Far from eliminating bilingual programs, as its critics charge, the bill would make proficiency in English a primary requirement for bilingual teachers, refine the requirements for evaluating bilingual programs, and let school districts decide whether their non-English speakers are best served by "immersion" courses or transitional training in native languages. That seems the wisest course.

A Disaster — Then Hot Air?

The expressions of disgust that prected the shooting down of a civilian airliner by the Soviet air force have been followed by a minimum of action. But the Sakhalin incident is not the first time the world has been faced with a contrast between words and deeds. Czechoslovakia in 1968, Afghanistan in 1979 and the re-subjection of Poland in 1981 were all cases in which the West argued publicly about sanctions and then did virtually nothing.

The usual excuse is detente, but nowadays the word is used increasingly to mean fear of doing anything that might amony the Soviets. This gulf between words and deeds has become so much a routine matter to Western governments and their spokesmen that they hardly notice it any more, but if the trend goes so far that the the general public itself begins to take it for granted that government pronouncements are so much hot air, democracy will have been shaken to its roots.

- Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich).

A "distasteful chapter" in U.S.-Soviet relations, declared an outraged spokesman for the Reagan administration last week. Was he referring to the cowardly shooting down of an unarmed Korea Air Lines 747 jetliner by a Soviet warplane? Oh no, not at all U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block, in Moscow to consummate the grain deal, was condemning the Carter administration's decision to retaliate against the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan by suspending grain sales!

Sincere expressions of concern over the cowardly destruction of 269 lives must be regarded as virtually meaningless until such time as [Washington] retaliates — strongly and effectively. A good place to start would be to halt the flow of grain to the Soviet Union.

- The Union Leader (Manchester, N.H.).

Policial reactions in the West have been disturbingly predictable. In many quarters there seemes to be a greater concern for exploiting the disaster for propaganda purposes than for establishing the actual detail of what occurred - and of trying to devise ways of ensuring that it will not be repeated.

The cruel action is primarily a matter for international action through the United Nations and IATA. But this should not hold up Soviet-U.S. talks on limiting nuclear arms or the setting up of the European disarmament conference. Indeed, the more international tension is reduced, the more chance there is of preventing a repetition of the disaster.

Inept Responses to a Disgusting Episode

WASHINGTON — The destruction of the Korean airliner killed more than the 269 persons aboard. It probably eliminated any possibility of rapprochement between America and the Soviet Union before the 1984 U.S. presidential which have the Livited States will in all tial election. Now the United States will in all tial election. Now the United States will in all likelihood have to start deploying medium-range ouclear missiles in Europe. The Kremlin will respond with "analogous" deployments, and escaladon of superpower tensions will follow.

The Polithuro must accept full responsibility for the tragedy. Whether orders came from Moscow or from some lower-level military headquarters in the Far East may be impossible to establish. But, as the Russians themselves have admitted, what happened to the Boeing 747 was more than an accident. The Soviet decisionmaking chain predictably put a greater premium on preventing the escape of an "intruder" than on protecting innocent human lives.

The official Soviet explanations demonstrate a conviction that downing a jumbo passenger jet is a legitimate solution to the security problem of the violation of airspace. It is this publicly pro-claimed sentiment, more than the inconsistencies in Moscow's statements, that provides the strongest indictment against the Soviet regime.

But if this Soviet performance is disgusting, the Reagan team's handling of the crisis is also troubling. For the first time since coming to office, the administration is confronted with a real emergency in relations with another super-power — and it has failed to respond adequately. Ronald Reagan's reaction amounted to a sad mixture of jingoistic rhetoric and impotence. His administration once again has said far too much

All this went down fairly well on the domestic political scene: The president looks tough and willing to challenge the Russian "barbarians," although in fact he has done little that will effectively chasten the Soviet Union.

The failure to act may oot cause problems at home. In fact it may have political benefits for President Reagan. No one has had to suffer the inconvenience of sanctions — not farmers, nnt

The bureaucratic primacy of State in the airline incident was asserted by Mr. Shultz at a news arms controllers, oot even the State Department bureaucrais who put a lot of effort into Secretary of State George Shultz's trip to the European security and cooperation conference in Madrid and did not want to see it canceled.

Mr. Reagan's performance also scored well with West Europeans. There was a sign of relief throughout NATO that he did not press U.S. allies to take drastic steps against Moscow and did not disrupt talks on intermediate-range nuclear weapons. Some commentators found the American rhetoric somewhat excessive and in poor taste. Yet talk is cheap, and by now most people expect as much from Ronald Reagan. But what about the effect of the administra-

By now Moscow undoubtedly sees that the incident badly damages the Soviet image abroad — particularly in Western Europe, where the Kremlin had hoped to head off the deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles. Many in the Reagan administration are undoubtedly pleased. What they fail to see is that there is more to a relationship with another superpower than putting it on the defensive. The United States has no alternative to sharing the planet with the Soviet empire. And dealing effectively with the Russians requires more than building public support in the West for a strong defense. Conveying U.S.interests and intentions to the Russians themselves is at least equally important.
On this score the Reagan administration has clearly failed. The American reaction virtually precluded the possibility of Soviet cooperation in clarifying the Korean airliner mystery. It would have been out of character anyway for secretive, suspicious and self-righteous Politburo members to admit the truth, but the United States gave the Kremlin little choice but to try to cover up what happened on Sept. I.

Even before Yuri Andropov — who allegedly was vacationing — and his colleagues had a chance to return to Moscow and ascertain what happened, Washington launched an indictment of the Soviet Union. Just hours after the disaster, Secretary Shultz charged that there could be "no excuse whatsoever for this appalling act."

Carried away with its own heated charges, the Reagan administration seems to have willfully ignored the evidence that the Russians' action might have been more confused than purposeful, more incompetent than criminal.

In fact, tapes of the Soviet interceptors' conversation with ground control and other data collected by the United States suggest that the Russians could, at least initially, have mistaken flight 007 for an American surveillance plane. And if U.S. civil aircraft engineers still cannot explain how the Boeing 747, with its foolproof backup systems, could manage to stray so far off course, it is not hard to imagine the suspicions of the Soviet air defense commanders.

In the face of a full-scale American propaganda assault, the Politburo responded predictably da assault, the Politburo responded predictably with a cover-up — accompanied by a great deal of self-righteousness and indignation that Washington was exploiting the situation to discredit the Soviet regime. Why didn't the Kremlin merely explain what happened? The answer lies in the nature of the Soviet regime: If it is publicly challenged from abroad, its instinct is to close ranks and launch a counteroffensive. Its greatest fear is to appear weak.

What is ironic is that after provoking Moscow with verbal blasts, the administration chose essentially to conduct business as usual.

This can only reinforce Soviet leaders' notion that the United States is disposed to bark at the Soviet empire whenever possible, but is reluctant to bite even when necessary. And thetoric not matched by action is received in the Politburo with a mixture of contempt and anger — hardly conducive to the kind of open, constructive discussion that should be possible between superpowers in a nuclear age.

It singled out an area - civil aviation - in which friends and allies played the lead role. In effect, the United States threw the ball to the Canadians, Europeans,

While the diplomatic situation argues for ending the affair, the in-ternal political climate is not ripe. The right-wing ideologues normally allied with Mr. Reagan have set up the kind of clamor they usually produce when confrontation is safely past. They have made the shooting down of the plane into a symbolic action of transcendent importance. President Reagan, to his credit, has tried to still the mmult. He has asked the right-wing critics whether they want him to make war. But he has bent to the wind all the same.

In his weekend broadcast he quoted his own comments about Communists reserving "unto thempearance at the United Nations that promises to feature a searing indictment of perfidious Russia. If there were gains to be made by Another dose of overblown rhetoric will edge them back toward the point of viewing Russia and the United States with almost equal alarm.

So the United States will be fortunate if it can wind down the airline incident at this point. The more likely prospect is that the damage the military hard-liners in Russia did to Soviet diplomacy will find in the damage done to American diplomacy by right-wingers an exact counterpart.

LETTER FROM BRAZZAVILLE

A Good Party That Lenin Might Not Have Enjoyed

BRAZZAVILLE—It was a good party, African-style, with three days of parades and dancing. The People's Republic of the Congo was celebrating its 20th hirthday as the oldest of the self-styled Marxist states in Africa. Brazzaville, one of the continent's greenest and most relaxed capitals, was also proudly put-ting on a mid-August show for hundreds of foreign guests.

The festivities had a markedly carefree flavor, with girls wearing dresses emblazoned with dollar signs. Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Lobachev, an urbane diplomat with past postings in Geneva and New York, looked on with the puzzlement he has shown on previous such occasions

since his arrival.

From his embassy window he can watch the daily chaotic scene as the packed ferry edges its way across the broad Congo River from the Zaire capital of Kinshasa. Just as Maya Maya airport's Marxist slogans greet the air traveler, so the Soviet Embassy with its red, embossed, larger-than-life head of Lenin on the wall is the first sight for travelers by the river route. "The first is one of academic excellence," Mr. Bryant said. These young women are here to continue that tradition. The second is one of sex discrimination, the exclusion of qualified female applicants. These women are here to put an end to that tradition."

A Test of Crisis Management With an Election Year on the Horizon

By John M. Goshko

WASHINGTON — In an eerie fulfillment of its own worst Cold War prophecies, the Reagan administration last week suddenly found itself at a flash point with the Soviet I Inion or Soviet-supported movements in three parts of the world.

In Lebanon, U.S. marines were under artillery and mortar attack by forces supported by the Syrians, who in turn are supported by Mos-cow. Four marines had been killed, and the pressure on the administration was either to back away from the effort to shore up the Lebanese government or to increase the U.S. military presence and exposure in that volatile

U.S.-Soviet relations were transfixed in the meantime by the shooting down of a Korean Air Lines 747 by a Soviet fighter near Sakhalin Island.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, in Madrid to sign a new European security pact, instead exchanged recriminations so sharp that they seemed to jeopardize already faint hopes of progress on arms control and other relaxations of East-West tensions.

And in Central America, almost unnoticed in the furor over these more immediate events, the United States kicked off the controversial military and naval exercises that the administration intends as a warning to the Soviet Union and Cuba that it will oot accept idly the spread of Communist-sided revolution through the re-

Campaign Approaching

One result of this was to put the president to a test in crisis management of a kind that he so far has avoided in his nearly three years in office. That test comes as a probable Reagan re-elec-tion campaign approaches. Mr. Reagan cam-paigned in 1980 as a hard-liner, promising to restore U.S. prestige and to stand up to the Russians and other adversaries in every corner of the world.

More recently, responding to pressures in Congress and from European governments, he sometimes has moderated this line on arms control and trade issues; even as he was deoouncing the Russians last week, they were buying American wheat under a oewly renegotiated long-term grain agreement, and recently there was talk in the White House of a U.S.-

Soviet summit oext year, an election year.
It is, therefore, an especially complicated time for the president in foreign affairs. These are the problems he must confront;

• Lebanon. The renewal of civil war between Lebanese religious and political factions has caught the Marine detachment there in a crossfire that in two weeks has left four dead, raised an outcry in Congress about whether the president is violating the War Powers Act and reopened the question of whether the United States should keep a military presence in such a country and under such constraints.

To withdraw the marines would mean retreat campaign promise to end the earlier embargo from the administration's goal of stabilizing the imposed by President Jimmy Carter. Lebanese government of President Amin Ge-it would open the way for the Soviet Union and its Arab allies such as Syria to extend their influence through the region.

But the choices available to Mr. Reagan strike U.S. policy-makers as equally unenviable.

To pull out could mean the downfall of Mr. Gemayel and the consignment of Lebanon to partition and chaos. To keep the marines there in their present force and role presumably would leave them open to further attacks. Yet to increase the U.S. force and give it more aggressive orders would put it in a combat role and almost certainly touch off a major new debate in the United States over the U.S. role as world

Administration officials say privately that Mr. Reagan is determined not to be forced out of Lebanon. Instead, they add, his most likely course is to keep the marines there, use whatever force is necessary to discourage further attacks against them and scale down the administration's previously ambitious hopes for Mr. Ge-

That would mean giving up for the present the idea that Mr. Gemayel can control the entire country and concentrating instead on helping him retain his foothold in the Berrut area. If that can be done, U.S. officials argue, there still would be hope of eventually inducing Syria and Israel to withdraw their forces and of bringing Mr. Gemayel and his domestic foes together in a new power-sharing arrangement that would re-

However, the officials concede, that is a long-shot scenario that will take months to play out, and in the interim, the United States will have to accept the likelihood of further marine casual-

 U.S.-Soviet relations. The U.S. response to the shooting down of the Korean jettiner, with the loss of 269 lives, is described by administra-tion officials as reflecting Mr. Reagan's view that the Soviet regime, while ruthless and even evil, also is a superpower with which the United States must probe cautiously and persistently for accommodations in the interests of preventing a nuclear holocaust.

In practice, that has boiled down to more words than deeds. While deploring the heinous nature of the Soviet act, Mr. Reagan has ruled out such steps as reimposing the grain embargo or calling off the U.S.-Soviet talks on reducing nuclear missiles. Instead, he has imposed a few relatively minor sanctions in civil aviation.

That was a keen disappointment to the hardcore conservatives who are Mr. Reagan's political base. But the administration appears confident that, despite their grombling, they will stay hitched because they have oowhere else to go.

In choosing his course, Mr. Reagan was motivated instead by several other political and diplomatic considerations. A grain embargo would have enraged American farmers and put Mr. Reagan in the position of breaking his mayel. It also would weaken U.S. credibility in on notice that America's NATO allies are fear-the Arab world, and U.S. officials say they fear full that any sign of flagging U.S. interest in ful that any sign of flagging U.S. interest in accommodation with the Russians will fuel the anti-nuclear movement in Europe just as the alliance is preparing to deploy new medium-range U.S. missiles there at year's end.

But while the U.S. response was short on substance, its rhetoric, as exemplified by the blunt exchanges between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Gromyko in Madrid, has led U.S. officials to warn privately that whatever chances may have existed for progress in arms control and other areas such as cultural and scientific exchanges probably are eliminated for some time.

Some officials noted that the acrimony evident between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Gromyko in Geneva had not been seen in the many meetings held by senior officials of the two governments in recent years. As a result, they said, it is oot even clear at this point whether the two will go ahead with their expected meeting at the United Nations General Assembly in New York later

Instead, the expectation is that the two superpowers, while conducting business as usual on existing agreements such as grain sales, will enter Mr. Reagan's final year in office with their already strained relations in a nearly glacial

· Central America, Earlier in the summer, the decision to conduct the largest U.S. exercises in history in Central America and the Caribbean had touched off a storm of fresh anxiety about whether the administration was getting on a collision course with Cuba and Nicaragua that would mean increased U.S. involvement in that

In fact, it seemed at the time that the controversy sparked by that move would make Central America the major issue of next year's presiden-tial campaign. Instead, it now seems destined to share that spot with Lebanon and U.S.-Soviet

Still, although recent events have turned publie attention to the other two areas of contention, Central America has been a perennial source of controversy in the Reagan administration, and U.S. officials expect that it will be only a matter of time before the issue bursts into the foreground again.

All of the elements that have raised doubts about the administration's approach still are there: concern that the United States should put more emphasis on negotiations rather than seeking a military solution to the war in El Salvador, uneasiness about the human rights record of U.S.-supported governments in El Salvador and Guatemala, opposition to covert U.S. support of anti-government guerrillas in Nicaragua, and fear that the administration's course inevitably will mean putting U.S. troops into a shooting war.

There already is concern that the newer troubles being confronted by Mr. Reagan will have an impact on the Central American situation.

Some opponents of the president's policies fear that he will try to capitalize on the anti-Soviet feeling stirred by the Korean plane incident, citing it as proof of the need to combat sness in the Western Hemi-

French Role in Chad Viewed as Crucial As Habré Struggles for Lasting Progress

By Iain Guest

International Herald Tribune ONGO, Chad - In 1974, at the height of M the worst drought ever known in the central belt of Africa, eight trucks arrived in this town in central Chad with food for its starving population. Two of the trucks were driven back fully laden to the capital, Ndjamena, where the government gave the food to privileged civil

In 1981, food aid was again being driven down the dusty street of Mongo, and once again much of it failed to reach the hungry. Instead, the trucks were stopped and robbed by troops from the Revolutionary Democratic Council, one of the 11 factions that participated in the government of President Goukouni Oueddei.

In 1983, the people of Mongo are living under their fourth change of government in Chad since 1974. They are also once again short of food after two years of successive drought and poor

But the food, for once, is reaching those who need it. Chadian soldiers still lounge in the shade around the French-built prefecture. But instead of hijacking trucks and stealing the food, they help with repairs and escort the trucks out to isolated communities.

here, the difference between the present adminstration of President Hissène Habré and previous regimes is striking.

"Habré is trying to establish honest, modern government in Chad," said Serge Semur, a Jesu-t priest who has worked in Mongo since 1964.

Inertia and Movement

Mongo typifies the sense of contradiction that is so noticeable to anyone trying to fathom Chad's long-running conflict. On the one hand, there are the constant factors of poverty and sickness: The average income in Chad is $120 a year, and the life expectancy is less than 40 years. On the other hand, there is the bewildering speed with which regimes have changed since Chad received independence from France in 1960, shifts that all agree have made it almost mpossible to create a government that can ensure basics like health, education and food

For many, the contrast is summed up in the iging Dakota DC-3 that lumbers in to Mongo's grass landing strip every week. It is Air Chad's only plane. No one knows how it keeps going. Yet somehow it does.

Chad has now plunged once again into one of its perennial crises, as President Habre tries to hold on to the power he seized in June 1982. His arch rival, Mr. Goukouni, whom he drove from power, has succeeded in retaking the northern part of the country with heavy Libyan support. The French have oow airlifted 3,000 troops to help Mr. Habrė.

Diplomats in Ndjamena say that the French ctioo highlights three issues of key importance to the whole African continent: first, the validity of the colonial frontiers that Chad inherited from France. Second, the question of whether Libya's leader, Colooel Moamer Qadhafi, is bent on destabilizing the governments of central Africa. And third, which vision of Chad's future development is more realistic — the desire for strong centralized government, as personified by Mr. Habre, or decentralized government that defers to Chad's tribal differences, as represented by Mr. Goukouni.

Lukewarm Support for Ḥabré

Diplomats in Ndjamena say the French government is not yet prepared to follow up its military suport for Mr. Habre with wholehearted political backing. The French, in fact, held back their military aid until the last moment, although once alerted to the Libyan involve-ment in the battle of Faya-Largeau they lost no time in launching Operation Manta.

In spite of the military buildup, Chadian ministers have concluded that President Francois Mitterrand is still trying to keep his lines of communication open with the Libyans. In a recent interview with the newspaper Le Monde in Paris, Mr. Mitterrand also raised the possibility of a "federation" between the northern and outhern parts of Chad.

This suggestion immediately reopened a de-bate that goes back to 1900, when the French defeated an Arab slaver named Rabah, founded Fort Lamy, later Ndjamena, and began their colonization of Chad.

The oorthern part of the country is almost all lesert. Its people are Moslem and account for less than 2 percent of Chad's population. So little interest did the French pay to it, that it was kept under military administration throughout

In 1935 the French ceded the corthern strip, Aozou, to Mussolini. Although this action was never recognized internationally, it has been used by Colonel Qadhafi to justify his seizure of the strip in 1973. The southern part of Chad, in contrast, was termed le Tchad utile by the French. They developed its cotton industry and trained southerners to run the civil service. Dilemma of North and South The north-south division still haunts Chad. and there are two radically different views about the best way to deal with it. One view holds that there is oo alternative but to accept some kind of decentralized government, or, as Mr. Mitter-rand pot it in his Le Monde interview, a federation. The other says that Chad's only chance of surviving as a modern state is to strengthen colonial frontiers and create a strong, centralized administration. These two visions of Chad have been personified and polarized by the bitter personal fend between Mr. Habré and Mr. Goukouni. The factions after they tried to crawl from their beds and slit each other's throats.

The leaders of the two factions have contrasting personalities. Mr. Goukouni is a soft-spoken, courteous man who had no formal education. He is described by an acquaintance as "charming, but weak." Mr. Habre is the reverse: an impatient, restless man who attended primary school and then seized the chance to continue his education in France. He puts in an 18-hour day and is a voracious reader of books, particularly those by Camus.

This contrast extends to the two men's attitude toward Libya. Mr. Goukouni has had an uneven relationship with the Libyans. But all agree he is now more than ever indebted to

Mr. Habre, by contrast, has a dislike for the Libyan leader that one diplomat described as "obsessive." All agree that it is reciprocal, and that Colonel Qadhafi badly wants revenge for the losses inflicted on his troops by Mr. Habré

Earlier this year Colonel Oadhafi set out four conditions for ending his support for Mr. Goukoum's rebellion. These were that Mr. Habre declare Chad an "Islamic socialist republic," that Chad join the Arab League, that "existing frontiers" between the two nations be recognized, and that a treaty be signed.

Control for Libya

All four conditions were quickly rejected by All four conditions were quickly recent by Mr. Habre's government. A diplomat said that a treaty would allow Libya to control Chad's army, while recognition of frontiers would acknowledge Libya's claim to the Aozou strip. The demand for an Islamic state ignores the fact that only half Chad's population are Moslem and only 8 percent of them are Arab.

"Whether or not Qadhafi wants to use Chad as a springboard to destabilize Africa, and he almost certainly does, is not the most important thing for Chad" said a diplomat. "What is important is that Chad's problems are the prob-lems of Africa: drought, disease and poverty, not the Arab-Israeli conflict."

Observers in Ndjamena have been able to contrast Mr. Goukouni and Mr. Habre by com-". paring their records while in office. The conclusion of a diplomat is that whereas Mr. Gou->. kouni's administration was a "complete". shambles," Mr. Habre has worked energetically and with moderate success to create a modern

Mr. Goukouni's cabinet comprised the leaders of the previously mentiooed 11 factions, which acted like Chinese warlords at the turn of the century: Ahmat Acyl, the leader of the Revolutionary Democratic Council, which held sway in the east of the country, was the foreign sway in the east of the country, was the foreign minister. Wadal Abdel Kamougue, whose faction controlled the south, was vice president. But Mr. Goukouni himself rarely visited these regions, and on several occasions open fighting broke ont between Mr. Goukomi's men and Mr. Acyl's.

Disappearing Francs

According to aid officials in Ndjamena, millions of francs disappeared from the revenues of Cotton Chad, the country's nationalized cotton company, and works at the Ndjamena hospital, recalled the from a huge European Community grant to For the small group of foreigners working civil war in 1980, when he was running an stabilize commodity earnings. > On the economic front, cotton production has risen sharply from 95,000 tons in 1981 to 103,000 tons this year. In June, customs officials collected six million French francs (about $750,000) in revenues at the Chari River crossing with Cameroon and at the airport. Small businesses are returning to the capital. Efforts are under way to plaster over the bullet holes that have pockmarked shops and houses along the formerly elegant boulevards.

Nationalism and Optimism

How can the situation be summed up? First, Mr. Habre's ardent nationalism and distrust of Libya has struck a chord in Chadians, as well as other African countries whose frootiers are less than secure. This concern, observers agree, probably goes deeper than the fear of the Chadian crisis turning into an East-West conflict

Second, many people who have lived and worked in Chad feel that the country can pull itself together, in spite of its many disparities. They also point out that the conflict is not, in the real sense, a "north-south conflict," but a; fend between the two northerners, Mr. Habré and Mr. Goukouni. Were it not for Libya's; support for Mr. Goukonni, they say, Mr. Habré would have won the war decisively. They also igree that in terms of ability and determinate Mr. Habré is a considerably more capable leader than Mr. Goukouni

Finally, they point out that Mr. Goukouni's factional partners are not representative leaders of Chad's diverse regions, and that they appear no more united at present than they were last year. The rebel leaders were meeting in Faya-Largeau when Mr. Habre's troops counterattacked in July. According to reports, their first reaction was that it was their own men fighting one another.

More Forceful Politics

Diplomats and others in Ndjamena argue that this should point to a more forceful political approach by the French, aimed at putting more pressure on Libya, and stressing the wabil-ity of Chad's frontiers. They also say France must start to press the United States for economic aid for Mr. Habre.

Above all, they feel, the need is for speed After a promising first nine months in power.

Mr. Habre has been thrown off course by the military crisis this summer, and there are increasing signs of insecurity. In the eastern town of Abeche, 200 town leaders, including the local or Abeche, 200 town leaders, including the local sultan, were arrested after the town fell to rebels in July and then was recaptured. In the south, marauding bands of gunmen are starting to prey on travelers, and they recently killed a Canadian priest. In Ndjamena itself, morale among civil servants has suddenly sagged again.

"The French must now act to bolster Mr. Habre's authority" said an observer. "It might be politically unpalatable for Mr. Mittercand. It points to greater involvement in a country where the French have been repeatedly scarred.

French decision to send in troops. And there is little doubt that it is the hard political choice not the military adventure, that will prove the supreme test of Mr. Mitterand's African policy.

Hampton's 'Tales': Exiles in Hollywood

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

ONDON - Having spent much L of my non-theatergoing time in the last few years researching and writing a book about British actors in California between the wars ("Tales From the Hollywood Raj") it was with a mixture of terfor and fascination that I approached Christopher Hampton's similarly titled "Tales From Hollywood" on the open Olivier stage of the National Theater.

Mercifully, we have not been ransacking the same cupboard. Where my exiles were escaping nothing more dramatic than failed exiles are all Middle European on the run from Hitler.

They include Brecht, the brothers Mann, Salka Viertel and Lion Feuchtwanger, and what one of our brightest and best dramatists has seen is something both hilarious and tragic in the notion of the greatest literary brains in mid-century Europe fleeing Hitler only to end up as slaves to the altogether different dictatorship of the Warner brothers.

"Tales from Hollywood" (first played to a curiously grudging press in Los Angeles last year) is an episodic, sketchy, funny, often touching and sometimes marvelous play that suffers all the usual border-crossing problems of the drama-documentary.

True, Hamptoo is at pains to establish that we are in a world more of fantasy than fact. His central character, the Austro-Hungarian playwright Odoo voo Horvath (whose "Tales From the Vienna Woods" Hampton translated for the National in 1977), never in fact got to Hnilywood at all, largely because on his way there he was killed by a falling tree in a thunderstorm in the Champs-Elysées. Undeterred by such minor details of history, Hampton has pushed him on to California as a kind of ghostly narrator, in Michael Gambon's wry performance, to introduce the expatriate colony of fellow Teutonic hacks trying to carve out a living by putting together junk screenplays in a nomad's land of donuts, dentistry and divorce.

Neatly sidestepping the shadows f Tom Stoppard's "Travesties" (which imagined a similarly unreal literary gathering in 1916 Zurich) Hampton sets up a series of sub-plots worthy of "Dinner at Eight."

wood saga of the period.

There is a wonderfully hostile portrait of Brecht, a nasty glimpse of Thomas Mann, desperately grafting away for a safe American professorship and ignoring the poverty and misery of his more distinguished elder brother Heinrich, the latter already locked into a disastrous marriage with the origioal nightclub singer from his "Blue Angel," and even a glimpse of the Marx brothers on their way to play tennis with Arnold Schoenberg. A lot of that is straight Hollywood wartime history, right down to the famous Variety report on Hitler's march into Czechoslovakia, highlighting a possible resul-tant 3 percent loss of foreign film income worldwide. But Hampton careers in provincial theaters or is not a movie historian (if he were, overprotective families, Hampton's he might have noted that some of the posters decorating Alison Chitty's set at the Olivier are anything up to five years out of period) and as a dramatist his main problem here is threading diverse strands of social, political and literary history into a play that says something Tom Kempinski's "The Beautiful coherent about the nature of exile. Based on the best-selling memoirs of two ex-surfies, "Puberty Blues" is the story of two high schoolers who make it into the surfing set on the beach in Sydney, Australia, and quickly become caught up in the adolescent milieu, where "sex is an obligation." The girls wait on the boys, "uncomplainingly and forev-er," and the viewer waits to see how lnog it will take for two "smart girls to see what's around them," writes Benson. She adds that it would be a mistake for Americans to believe that this "terrific way of life" only existed in Australia. Bank of Scotland's New Chicago Office Is to Be Headed by C.D.M. Hunter

Bank of Scotland plans to open a representative office in Chicago this autumn that will concentrate on what it sees as "good opportunities for profitable corporate business throughout the Midwest."

"We hope to persuade large Midwestern companies to place funds with us and to provide financing for those companies," a spokesman in the head office in Edinburgh said. Chicago's futures markets "added to the bank's Midwest attraction," he said.

The new representative office is to be headed by C.D.M. Hunter, who currently is a vice president in the bank's New York branch.

Bank of Scotland, the oldest British commercial bank, made its first move into the United States in 1972 when it opened a representative office in Houston to support its North Sea oil-financing activities. Since then, the bank has established its U.S. headquarters in New York and opened a representative office in Los Angeles.

Roth to Head Merrill European Unit Merrill Lynch Europe/Middle East is setting up a new management

Heading the group in the new position of chairman is Donald C. Roth. Mr. Roth, who is based in London, said the post was created because "we realize we've got to run the European operations from Europe." The Europe-Middle East operations previously were based in New York.

In addition to Mr. Roth, the company is moving a number of its executives from elsewhere in Europe and the United States to London. This consolidation of management will make us more efficient," Mr.

Mr. Roth is to be responsible for all the company's business activity throughout Europe and the Middle East, spanning 13 countries. This includes its brokerage, commercial and investment banking, Eurobond trading and other activities.

Mr. Roth joined Merrill Lynch in 1965 and has worked in New York, Tokyo and London. Before his new appointment, he was executive vice ident of Merrill Lynch International Inc. and chairman of Merrill Lynch International Banking group.

Merrill Lynch Europe/Middle East is a unit of Merrill Lynch Capital

Markets, the worldwide investment arm of Merrill Lynch & Co.

As Listings Slip, the Amex Tries Harder

By Michael Blumstein

New York Times Service NEW YORK - In the mid-1960s, the American Stock Exchange was the place to go for market action. At one point, trading got so heated that the president of the exchange issued a statement warning against excessive speculation in Amex stocks.

The late 1970s sparked investor interest in the exchange, too. The focus then was on the Amex's energy stocks, which helped push the exchange's index to new highs.

Today, however, the Amex has lost some of its momentum. While the index again registered strong gains in the past year's bull market, the number of fisted companies has steadily slipped. The volume of stock trading has also failed to grow as rapidly as that of its two main competitors, the New York Stock Exchange, which has started a push for the growth companies traditionally attracted to the Amex, and the over-the-counter market, whose sophisticated electronic trading systems are becoming more popular.

Nonetheless, Wall Street is not writing the Amex's nbituary. The wisdom is that the exchange will carve out a new niche by wooing small quality companies and by continuing to diversify into new products, primarily options on stocks and stock indexes.

In coursing companies to list, the Amex today emphasizes a wide variety of services. It will send an official of the exchange to the meetings of its companies. It provides free use of its wellappointed board room. And it runs 18 clubs around the world where executives from Amex companies can prompte their stock to local

"We've become the focal point for the interests of these companies," said Arthur Levitt Jr., chairman of the exchange Perrin H. Long Jr., an industry analyst with Lipper Analytical Services Inc., said: "If I had to sum it up, the exchange will continue to exist. However, they'll have to actively market the advantages for being on the American Stock Exchange just to maintain their share of listed

In the past, companies that have gone public, selling shares of stock to investors, often traded first in the over-the-counter market, then on the American Stock Exchange and finally on the New York Stock Exchange, known also as the Big Board and which has the most igorous standards for listing.

Lately, however, some companies such as Apple Computer, MCI Communications and Intel have decided to remain on the over-thecounter market, while a few others, like Telerate Systems and Legg Mason Wood Walker, have listed on the Big Board upon going public. U.S. Retail Sales Slipped by 1.4% In Latest Month

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche WASHINGTON -- Retail sales in the United States - vitally important to the recovery - fell 1.4 percent in August, the biggest drop since June 1982, the Commerce Department said Tuesday.

Retail sales totaled $97.6 billion in August after seasonal adjust-

Although the sales weakness has been encouraging to Wall Street, which is fearful that strong sales would drive up prices and interest rates, a disappearance of consumer enthusiasm could set back the economic recovery, analysts said. The leveling-off began with the July 1 tax cut that was expected to bolster sales by funneling tax savings into the spending stream. June sales were up 0.75 percent. Separately, Federal Reserve System economists reported Tuesday that consumer borrowing in July reached a seasonally adjusted record $4.84 billion, on the strength of an all-time high expansion of automobile loans The July figure topped the previous growth record of $4.4 billion

"The magnitude (of the decline) is kind of surprising," said Ralph Semprevin, an economist with Chase Econometrics, a Bala Cynwyd, Pennsylvania, analysis firm.

The end of most financing promotions by auto manufacturers and relatively high interest rates cut into the demand for autos at the same time many of the most popular models were unavailable.

EC, U.S. Fail to Break Steel-Trade Deadlock

BRUSSELS - The European Community and the United States have failed to break a deadlock over the transatlantic trade in steel products, EC officials said Tues-

An inconclusive new round of talks with the United States was held here Monday on two major disagreements threatening to strain

Washington-EC trade ties further. The EC is demanding compensation for restrictions imposed by the United States on high-quality steel imports, and the U.S. steel industry is complaining about British plans to export semi-finished steel products to the United States for processing and marketing.

The U.S. delegation is scheduled to return to Brussels on Sept. 26, when the two sides again are to try to settle the dispute rather than go through the complex and protracted procedures mandated by the General Agreement on Taniffs and President Ronald Reagan's July decision to impose quotas and tariffs on specialty-steel imports provoked anger in Europe. And some U.S. steelmakers are threatening anti-dumping action if British Steel Corp. goes ahead with its arrangement with U.S. Steel Corp. to sell its semi-finished products in the United States.

[The dispute was perhaps exacerbated when U.S. officials announced last week that the United States was shutting off imports of three categories of speciality steel until mid-October because foreign suppliers speeded up shipments after President Reagan had imposed the quotas in July.]

1982. Companies cite two basic rea-sons for listing on the Amex. They like the services offered, including the exchange's method of trading. or they perceive status in being listed on an exchange but are not big enough or profitable enough to qualify for the Big Board. "It's no secret we try much harder" than previously, said Walter H. Liebman, the Amex executive vice president for marketing. "We used to be a passive institution. We've become an active institution."

The Amex has also secured its place by diversifying primarily into options. Options are the right to buy or sell a security at a given price during a specified period. Since it started trading in op-tions backed by stocks in 1975, the American Exchange has been the No. 2 market, behind the Chicago Board of Options Exchange. Today, the Amex derives more

In June, Mr. Taubman agreed to buy the 29.9 percent stake in Sotheby built up by Knoll International Holdings at 700 pence ($18.58) a share, conditional on Monopoly Commission approval. Mr. Taub-man then held a 14.9 percent direct

By Warren Brown

WASHINGTON - U.S. antomakers disagree sharply over how many cars Japan should be allowed to import into the United States thring a fourth year of quotas, ac-cording to industry executives and trade officials.

General Motors Corp. wants an increase of at least 300,000 Japanese cars sent to the United States under voluntary export quotas, while Ford Motor Co. favors leaving the quota at 1.68 million cars, the limit since 1981, and Chrysler has told U.S. trade officials to press for a longer extension of the quotas than the Japanese now seem pre-

Seymour Rubenstein, president of MicroPro and a former director of Osborne Computer, said: "The market for these sorts of computers is exploding. What do you think of a company that stumbles in a growing market?"

Osborne's success attracted dozens of competitors. Some of them, like KayPro, simply improved upon Osborne's idea and marketed it more successfully. Other companies built portable versions of the successful nonportable personal computers, as Compaq did for the IBM Personal Computer.

Perhaps the most crippling mistake that the company made was to make an early announcement of an improved version of the Osborne earlier this year. The company had let it be known that its new Executive computer would be vastly superior to the old Osborne 1. That caused potential Osborne buyers to wait for the new model. "Sales, which were really going great at the time, dropped dead," Mr. Rubenstein

The sudden gap in the cash flow forced Osborne to delay plans to sell stock to the public and crippled the company as it tried to catch up.

Computer industry observers criticized Osborne's early management team as ill-equipped to manage the transition from entreprehas never made a profit. Industry insiders say that time and opportunity have passed Osborne by. They point to machines like Radio Shack's lap-sized TS-100 that retails for less than $1,000, Sharp Electronic's portable that weighs only 11 pounds, compared with Osborne's 26, or Galivan's $4,000 briefcase-sized computer that comes with a touch-sensitive screen and high-powered software. "Osborne came up with a great first package," a venture capitalist with investments in companies that compete with Osborne said. "But what did they follow it up with and when? In an industry like this,

American Wins Suit Dismissal

The Associated Press

DALLAS - A federal judge has granted an American Airlines motion to dimiss a Justice Department suit alleging that American attempted to fix fares with Braniff International in 1982.

The suir stemmed from a aped telephone conversation between American's president Robert Crandall, and the former Braniff chairman, Howard Putnam. U.S. District Judge Robert Hill ruled Monday that since Mr. Putnam never agreed to raise Braniff's prices as Mr. Crandall suggested, no attempt at fare fixing had taken place. The government had asked that Mr. Crandall be removed as firm president for two years.

Chrysler Says It Will Retire Warrants

By Warren Brown Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Chrysler Corp. officials, commenting on their success in outbidding competitors for U.S. government-held warrants to buy 14.4 million shares of Chrysler stock, say they will retire the warrants.

Chrysler, operating through the New York-based investment firm of Salomoo Brothers, offered $21.602 Monday for each warrant. That means that the government could make $311.07 million, nearly $61 million more than Chrysler was willing to pay for the warrants in July. But Chrysler officials said the extra cost was worth getting the warrants back into the company's

The warrants, good until 1990, allow the purchase of a share of Chrysler stock for $13. They were obtained by the government in re-turn for the $1.2 billion in federal loan guarantees that Chrysler needed to pull itself from the brink of bankruptcy.

Chrysler stock was trading below 57 in 1979 when the warrants were for future needs.

BOOKS

THE ICE HOUSE

By Nina Bawden. 236 pp. $11.95. St. Martin's, 175 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Elizabeth Ward

CCT HE Ice House" is the latest in a long line I of pleasant, undernanding and well-crafted novels by the popular English author Nina Bawden. Like each of her earlier books, it offers a methodical shift of perspective in the series of vigneties through which Bawden seems bent on composing a full-scale portrait of contemporary English middle-class life.

Each "installment" is roughly the same length and has the same look and tone and flavor as the next one. Although I do not mean to suggest by this that her many novels are indistinguishable from each other, it is true that most of them tend to flow together in the memory, forming a kind of huge quintessential Nina Bawden book, as light and digestible as a good soufflé.

Consequently, "The Ice House" is as useful an introduction to her work as any of them. It has the "familiar passions" (title of an earlier Bawden novel) and the standard themes: mantal bliss and disillusionment, layer upon layer, like onion skins; misunderstandings between generations; rooted childhood fears and fantasies still entangling the present. It even has the same principal personalities, ranged against each other with due symmetry: wives and hus-bands; adulterers and cuckolds; mothers and children; the coarse old mother-in-law; the heroine with a modest drinking problem; the dropout son. And the setting is, as so often, comfortable, inner suburban London, from which the characters flee, at times of domestic crisis, to some exotic Mediterranean country; in "The Ice House," it is Egypt, in others, Turkey or Morocco. Her comic portraits of the English sojourning abroad are among the best moments of her books.

Daisy Brown and Ruth Perkins have been best friends since childhood, their relationship representing a classic attraction of opposites. from an Ruth is "small and dark and intense," unhappy home (the "ice house" of the title was used by Ruth's father as a pit of punishment), whereas Daisy is plump and fair and happy-go-lucky, with idyllic childhood memories. They grow up, contract into more or less happy marriages, and come to live near each other in the same gentrified row of terraces, with a view of London's "astonishing sky line" on the one hand and "the plastic detritus" of a sordid tenement on the other. The chief catalyst of action is the alleged suicide of Daisy's husband. But what this event catalyzes is oot, as one might expect, the unraveling of Ruth's and Daisy's secure family lives. It is the gradual realization of both families that their lives were pretty unraveled already, shredded by false expectations, misplaced trust and betrayal. From this point on, the novel

The Ice House" is also a vehicle for the familiar Bawden voice, so easy to listen to the difficult to pin down; sympathetically breezy perhaps describes it best. Pain and bitterness and loss are the very stuff of her plots, but for the most part, are distanced to the point of shrugging good humor by her brisk manning the point of the point o shrugging good humor by her brisk manner.

"This is a comedy, not a tragedy," says Daisy revealingly, at a moment of crisis. "Ing way human beings behave. Like in 'A Midsag, mer Night's Dream." The only serious changes ters are the fairies. The people are jokes Bawden doesn't exactly set up her characters is jokes; our do her interests extend to "fairies." the spiritual element. But "The Ice House" & social comedy, in Daisy's sense, symmetrical and neatly resolved, with no extraneous of overreaching passions to disturb the readers,

This is nonetheless an accomplished novel in the manner that Bawden has brought to a. peak of casual perfection over the years. But, there is something rather stale, even formulair, about "The kee House" that suggests that Nina Bawden may be exhausting finally, the postibilities of her material.

The reviewer, a Washington-based writer, 5 wrote this review for The Washington Post.

Japan's Wholesale Prices Fall Reuters

TOKYO — The unadjusted Japanese wholesale price index fell 0.2 percent in August, compared with a 0.2-percent increase in July, the Bank of Japan said Tuesday. The August index was 2.9 percent lower than it had been a year earlier, after having had a 2.4-percent year-to-year fall in July, it said. Noon Previous 456.13 460.35 2.559.60 2,575.40

Even so, the treadmill will not discard a true star who, by judi-cious living and unstituting effort and ambition, proves himself on the field though approaching 33, remains indispen-sible to the cause: a scalecoper and sible to the cause: a goalscorer and goal-maker adjudged the best per-former in Britain last season despite a tendancy of experts to write his epitath.

Younger men have come and gone while Dalglish soldiers on. And Dalglish, refusing even to believe that he may be carrying a slight injury, is itching to play in the first round of the European Cup Wednesday night. "You don't tell anyone at Liverpool you are not feeling well," said his young col-league Craig Johnston. "It can take six months to get your place back."

And, since Liverpool so thoroughly watched a first round oppo-nent many would arrogantly have underestimated, I offer Odense this small tip: "When Dalglish gets the ball, there are five or six players, in five or six positions, starting to run,

There are, of course, other clubs setting out to capture the three European honors this season; 127 clubs in fact, S.V. Hamburg, the Champions' Cup Winner of 1983, should have faced Albanian opposition but, as usual, the Albanians are absent and Hamburg, to its chagrin, has a bye and thus no gate media to prejudge Lozano as a stylist outside the Madrid mold, a suggestion ha began putting to the sword with a convincing first game in domestic competition. Nevertheless, if Real Madrid is to puncture its label as bridesmaid (following five runners-up awards last sea-son), Lozano must be integrated pretty quickly; Wednesday's UEFA Cup opponent Sparta Prague is a pretty stiff examination, especially after Real's fearful 6-2 defeat at Malaga.

This fact has caused the Spanish

Similarly, in the Cup Winner's tournament, the even more experienced Dukla Prague, led by wily lawyer Zdenck Nehoda and his ag-gressive runner Ladislav Vizek, might prove another mountain to hurdle of Valencia a year ago.

Finally, proving that time waits all thinking they've got a chance of getting it. And Kenny sorts out the right one to pass to."

for no man, Juventus must get us act together to stave off Poland's sprightly Lechia Gdansk. Dino zoff and Roberta Bettega have been pensioned off to other pastures; Paolo Rossi, so potent at the World Cup, so barren in the Champion's Cup final against Hamburg, has been moved aside to the right wing. "He gets kicked 20 times a game," explains manager Giovanni Trappatoni.

Meaning what? Meaning that someone else has been hired to take the kicks for the precious Rossi. That someone is Domenico Penzo, a failed boy wonder with Roma now purchased from Verona to be-come, at 30, probably the best paid punching bag in the world. The price of pain.

Chuck Hiller, the Cardinals' third base coach, gives some extra assistance to Andy Van Styke as the Pirates' third baseman, Jim Morrison, watches the ball skidding into left field.

Cardinals' Coach, Controversial Call English cup winner Manchester United, which fell over the first Act to Hand 7-5 Triumph to Pirates and pinch hitter Brian Harper drove in two runs apiece as the Pirates, with a helping hand from a St. Louis coach, defeated the Cardinals, 7-5, Monday night.

A sixth inning interference call against Chuck Hiller, the Cardinals' third base coach, by third base umpire Randy Marsh touched off a 10-minute argument and stripped St. Louis of what then would have been the tying run.

"I think the umpire overreacted," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said, still visibly upset a half-hour after the game ended. The Pirates were leading, 5-3, when George Hendrick drew a walk off winner Lee Tunnell (9-5) and Andy Van Slyke drilled a don-ble into right field, scoring Hendrick, Van Slyke kept on running when cutoff man Dale Berra 100k right fielder Dave Parker's throw and threw to home.

Catcher Tony Pena caught the ball and threw to third, but the ball eluded third baseman Jim Morrison and skidded down the left field. line. Van Slyke picked himself up after becoming tangled with Morrison and scored easily to apparently tie the score at 5-5. But Marsh immediately called

Van Slyke out, claiming that Hiller had touched the runner on his way to the plate. Under baseball rule 7:09i, a coach is not permitted to either touch or physically assist a

"Basically, it's a common sense rule, and there was no common sense involved," Herzog said. "I've never seen it called, and I coached third base for a few years. I touched runners. In a game like this, he [Marsh] comes up with that call."

Pirate Manager Chuck Tanner said he was on his way to third base to protest Hiller's action when the call was made. "I told [umpire] Billy Williams, I know the rule.' He told me, It's the only rule you know," Tanner said.

With the victory, the Pirates closed to within 11/2 games of National League East-leading Phila-delphia and dropped the Cardinals into fourth place.

Montreal Ousts Cosmos in Soccer

MONTREAL (Combined Dispatches) — Dragan Vijovic's goal in the second round of a shoutout gave the Montreal Manic a 1-0 victory over Cosmos on Monday night, eliminating the defending Soccer Bowl champions from North American Soccer League playoff action.

It was one of the biggest upsets in NASL history: The Cosmos, which had qualified for five of the past six Soccer Bowls, finished first overall in the regular-season standings with a 22-8 record and 194 points while the Manic finished eighth with a 12-8 mark and 124 points, and needed a victory in their final game to secure a playoff berth.

The victory over the New York side sent Montreal into the semifinals for the first time in the team's history. Montreal won the first game of the best-of-three series, 4-2, in East Rutherford, New Jersey, last week.

Among the seven athletes dropped for what the paper said were poor performances and "moral breaches of sports discipline" were Viktor Bryzgin and Andrei Prokofiev, who won bronze medals in the 4x100-meter relay at the World Championships.

Fromholtz Takes Break From Tennis

NEW YORK (AP) - Dianne Fromholtz of Australia, a tour player NEW YORK (AF) — Diamic Fromnoitz of Australia, a tour player since 1972, has announced that she was taking an indefinite leave of absence from tennis, effective immediately. Citing "a momentary loss of interest in the game," Fromholtz said early this week that she and her husband, Claude Belestrat, would return to Australia.

"After giving 10 years of my life [to tennis], it's hard to let go," she said. "Nevertheless, I had to reach a decision. Ten years straight is a long time for anyone coming from Australia and staying on the tour for months on Ranked as high as fourth in the world in 1979, Fromholtz lost in the first round of both the women's singles and doubles during the current U.S. Open Championships. She is currently ranked 67 in the world.

Argovitz Sells His Agent Business

HOUSTON (UPI) - An international construction equipment salesman has bought Jerry Argovitz's player contract negotiating business, clearing any potential conflicts of interests the new owner of the Houston Gamblers of the U.S. Football League may have faced.

Argovitz had been ordered when he organized the fledgling Gamblers earlier this year to remove himself as a players' agent due to the possibility of a conflict of interest. Among Argovitz's 24 clients were such National Football League players as Joe Cribbs of Buffalo, Curtis Dickey of Baltimore, David Overstreet of Miami, Billy Sims of Detroit and Robert Brazile of Houston.

Coe to Skip Meets Until Olympics

LONDON (AP) - Britain's Sebastian Coe, the world record-holding middle distance runner, said Monday that he will not compete in any major track and field meets before next year's Olympic Games.

Coe was forced to miss the World Track and Field Championships at Helsinki because of a glandular infection, an illness which affected his performances for much of this season. "I certainly hope that most of my problems will be behind me" by the time of the Olympics, Coe said.

USFL to Receive Help From Pac-10

NEW YORK (Combined Dispatches) — The Pacific-10 Conference officiating crews will work U.S. Football League games next season in a move aimed at improving officiating in the spring-summer professional league, USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons announced Monday.

The USFL does not have a formal agreement with the conference, so individual officials are free to make their own deals with the league. Simmons said that he hopes similar arrangements can be made with other conference officials, and even National Football League officials.

13 Tennis Players Fined at U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Nineteen fines were levied against 13 male players during the U.S. Open tennis tournament, including a $1,000 fine against singles winner Jimmy Connors, officials said Monday. Connors was fined for one verbal obscenity and one visible obscenity during his victory over Ivan Lendl in the final.

The 19 fines, imposed for conduct during the qualifying and main draws of the tournament, totaled $8,200, said Marshall Happer, administrator of the Men's International Professional Tennis Council. Last year, there were six fines for $6,650 during the tournament. In 1981, there were nine fines for $3,600.

"No," said one. "We're politicians," And with that they swept inside faster than a horde of Hoover salesmen and began kissing my baby girl and shaking hands with me and my wife and my son and the dog.

"We're running for president of the United States," said one.
"Door-to-door. We can't stay long.

One said he was Walter Mondale, a former vice president under someone whose name he could not recall, and to prove it told of four long years of watching the bands that play "Hail to the Chief" blow the moisture out of their instruments and pack them away by the time he paraded hy.

Mondale said he noticed I had red hair, and that he wanted to do something for the redheaded maybe send them some cash. "You see," he said solemnly, "I almost had red hair once myself."

A younger fellow named Garv Hart declared that hair was the most important issue in his campaign. A third, Alan Cranston, who the others said was the candidate of the bald and the distractingly thin, noted that nothing in this world is certain, but that he just might have had red hair him-

One of them revived me with smelling salts he always kept handy for campaign appearances: I told Glenn that he did remind me of Eisenhower — especially lately. My wife said he'd put me to sleep faster than the guy who'd been here talk-ing about whole-life insurance. Seeing she was impressed, Cranston recalled the time he had an insomniacs convention dropping in the aisles. "Oh, them," scoffed Mondale. "They used to hang around my house like it was Lourdes." I told them it was just a bit early for most of us to be interested in next year's election. I put on some coffee. My wife made a big platter of sandwiches and gave them to

"We like cheese," said my wife.
"Oh," said Mondale, "there would be cheese under my administration. But we must offer a tronbled America more than cheese."

"Crackers!" yelled Cranston, and my wife scurried to get him some. The candidates began jumping up and down, chanting "Cheese and crackers!" and singing "Happy Days Are Here Again."

"And," shouted Glenn, "Tang to wash them down!" "Yes!" thundered Mondale.

"But let us also go forth with an amazing offer never before made available by any political party: Cheese? Yes! But more than that: Fondue sets!"

"This bold initiative," he said excitedly, "would be administered from a vast federal building in Washington containing armies of civil servants.

York off and oo over the years, he now divides his time between the Goodman Theater in Chicago, where he is an associate director, and his home in Vermont.

Mamet began his career as an acting teacher at his alma mater, Goddard College in Vermont. He planned to be an actor and director, but began writing plays be-cause there were so few works suitable for 18-year-old actors, "unless you want to put white shoe polish in your hair and do 'Uncle Vanya.' "
In the last few years, Mamet has written two screenplays and is now working on a third movie and a pilot for a television show. He has written television specials and pilots in the past, but nothing has ever reached the screen. What makes this pilot different? "The guy said he'd give me a dog." Mamet says. "We got talk-a sofa and a mop.

"I think I get half of the dog on signing and half on submission of the first draft." But a new dog isn't Mamet's only motivation for continuing his life in the theater. "It's an incluctable part of our life," he says, "Can you name two ancient Greek politicians or businessmen? Can you name a Russian businessman of the 19th century? But you can name a couple playwrights. "It's an absolutely essential part of our lives. We tell stories all the time. We go to the theater to hear stories told just like we tell them to each other. In our inter-action in our daily lives we tell stories to each other, we gossip, we complain to each other, we exhort. These are means of defining what our life is. The theater is a way of doing it communally, of sharing that experience, and it's absolutely essential."

PEOPLE Apologies to Kiester

apologized to a freshman congressman for using the word "keister." Democratic Representative Tim Penny, a native of Kiester, Minnesota, said he received a letter of apology in response to one he wrote in May about Reagan statements he deemed offensive to his home-town, population 681, whose name is pronounced in the same way. Reagan had said in different speeches both that he was fed up to his keister with news leaks and that he wished bankers would get off their keisters and lower interest rates. "I resolve to never use that honored name again in that context," Reagan wrote to Penny. "In all these years I have never known it was a proper name. Please convey my regret and my apologies to your constituents and tell them I ask forgiveness." Penny said he was satisfied with the apology and plans to meet with Reagan next month to present him an official Kiester Jaycees cap.

Lorin Maszel, director of the Vienna State Opera since September 1982, and his wife, the planist Israela Margalit, have separated after 14 years of marriage and plan to get a divorce, "The divorce is only a formality," said Margalit, after completing a concert tour of West Germany. "We have parted in all friendship." Margalit said she would return to the United States with the couple's children, Ban, 12, and Fions, 8, who will visit their father in Vienna every year. Next season the pianist, who interrupted her career after the birth of her children, will perform with the Berlin Philharmonic. "I was very happy with Lorin for many years, but our careers went separate ways,"

Maralyn O'Connor packed her wedding dress, just in case - and at the annual matchmaking festival in the west of Ireland resort of Lisdoonvarna, the blond Chicago-an, who lists her age as "35-ish," became the first to find a mate. "Tve met a nice farmer from County Clare," she said. "He has 200 acres and 2,000 sheep. This has to be the man for me." O'Connor was one of 49 of Chicago's most eligible women who flew to Ireland for the annual three-week Festival of Bachelors, a post-harvest spouse-
